Parashat BEHAR... enumerates the laws of the Sabbatical (seventh) year, and the Jubilee (fiftieth) year, and stipulates caring for the poverty stricken. Contrary to what might have expected at the end of Leviticus, there is no mention of sacrifices - rather, the laws of land ownership and social commerce are described. In particular, those who had become poor could once again garner hope that their plight would be relieved and they would begin afresh.
